A smooth transition between living spaces and natural surroundings

The residential ensemble is situated in an 11,000m² urban landscape, not far from the border to the neighbouring districts of Weissensee and the highly popular Prenzlauer Berg. The area is very similar to a park, with no cars. With its landscaped gardens and vertical garden facades, the project blends in perfectly with the surrounding environment.

A total of 2,460 large plant troughs have been integrated into the surrounding terraces and rooftops of the residential buildings. This creates small, private, vertical retreats – an oasis right in the heart of the city – and helps improve the microclimate in the flats and on the balconies.

All the buildings were fitted with a timber facade and large timber window frames behind the in-situ concrete.

The th62 project has been nominated for the “DAM Prize 2022” by the German Architecture Museum (“Deutsches Architekturmuseum”) in Frankfurt am Main for its exceptional architecture.
