Residential and commercial building in the Media City district

A harmonious combination of mid-19th century and modern urban development

The district's numerous mid-19th century buildings provided the architectural framework for the Media City district. Ridge and eave heights and vertical façade structures, including plinths, a central zone, bays and dormers, fit neatly into the historical context. The façade comprises a light thermal insulation composite system with oblique elements that taper towards the window openings as a refreshing accent facing the street side. In the inner courtyards, the façades feature generous window areas. All apartments have a terrace, balcony or roof deck and offer views over the ancient trees, the benches and the playgrounds in the greenery below.

Kurt-Eisner-Straße, Leipzig

The property on Kurt-Eisner-Strasse in Leipzig comprises 70 rental flats, two large commercial areas as well as an underground car park with 60 parking spaces.

3

The quarter was named after the neighbouring Media City Leipzig.

The preserved Wilhelminian architecture in the neighbourhood provided the architectural framework for the Mediacity quarter.
