Office complex adds glamour to the state capital

Citterio based his design on the concept of an Italian palazzo. Characteristic of this design, besides the two cosy, secluded inner courtyards (perfect places for networking), is the three-dimensionally structured façade with projecting gilded bronze aluminium frames. The predominant features of the interior are North Italian natural stone and floors of anthracite-coloured tiles, with oak and bronze highlights. The concierge, reception area and fireside lounge in the atrium remind you more of a 5-star hotel lobby than an office building.

Successful teamwork

The project was a team achievement involving multiple locations, companies, and regions. PORR took the leading role, bringing in also the partner responsible on site for the facade, and managed the project in the form of a consortium. Despite the confined inner-city location, an elaborate logistics concept ensured the almost trouble-free delivery of building materials throughout the shell construction and finishing works. Responsibility for calculation, tendering and planning services was assumed by PORR subsidiary pde Integrale Planung GmbH. Experienced building services site managers from PORR Vienna also supported the Munich construction team.
