Room for growth

letting daylight in as far as the ground floor. The central lobby is flanked by a staircase with seating and lounge areas and can also be used for events. The building also houses so-called “living rooms” which are designed to promote social interaction by offering a variety of communal spaces: sofa suites with a co-working flair, kitchenettes with wooden tables and bar stools, and a balustrade with space for your laptop and an unobstructed view across the entire atrium. Open staircases enhance the flow of communication and connections between these communal areas on the individual floors.

Building and planning from a single source

PORR's scope of services included not only the construction, but also the general planning and the entire execution planning, which was carried out by pde Integrale Planung. A team of experts from PORR's Berlin and Düsseldorf branches used BIM (building information modelling) to ensure optimum coordination between the architecture, structural design, mechanical and electrical engineering, and sustainability aspects.
